

Given: two players the size of a small tugboat,
freezing center ice.

Given: puck a,
puck b,
puck c,
puck/star d as in drop or draw.

Given: angle of the first player when cojoined with the second play creating barely obtuse in late afternoon icelight.

Given: in exchange for.

Prove: a) gift or b) anything at all in passive tense or passive tender : need to shoot and crash from which line of thought.

Therefore: Four plays at the cost of real time.

Worth: She or it or tenable. Or unbounded goalie.

My eye slipped loose for an instant, giving her time for a fake, enough as was impending already from a two-on-one situation ever worth giving, given break.

Given another take, then instigation.

Given those conditions above which allow for multiple necessities of tightened breath.

A coil of sleep.

persisting or not, in closure everlonging and sentiment, ill-

fevering toward the next event, storing heat in the freezer, waiting for the next furl to wake up and skate in to reality : the therefore comes handling in with pleased to get by, a handful of defenses going to bed with the next play impending.

Once I give over the let I am just a giver and that is the problem beginning, Give over the let.

A given distance from ice to no ice translates itself into the time it takes and which it is from. If you drop/give and that at a breath-width, the taking and the running out the clocks and the witness that left me hanging on the balcony with a cigarette a motive and a match but all I could say was but all I could say was but all I could say was could you please give a little and what/not.
continues as if breathing never stopped for either of us. Drawing up constitutes the other side of the line, I take from this each suggestive point to hold and to cover,
blue to shining blue line.

What is there to fear
about a large sheet of ice. (Inability to hold its hand.)

If one of us were to grow together, not necessarily up but in perhaps,
only the problem of distance is solved then re-exacerbated.

Scared off by the blue on white,
then the red on white,
a small child holds my hand
with no points barred.
He wishes me lots of goals and I wish him lots of skating.

Or beauty like that.

And with this door, I give thee out. He spilled me to always watch the five-hole and if I let, don't give/all the same.
